Four Styles

Blue Blue is the color of the sky and the ocean. It is also seen as the color of authority. Explorers have long been pioneers of the land, the ocean, in space, and their characteristics match this style. They enjoy looking at the big picture-that is, being in charge and are comfortable taking appropriate risks for themselves and their groups. They are goal oriented people and like having their fingers in many pies. They are generally motivated by challenge and like competition. People of other styles get frustrated with these "blues" because they see them as sometimes impatient and abrupt people, selective listeners, but they appreciate the strong leadership qualities that they display.	Green Green is the color of the dollar and was one of the original colors on the computer screens. Of all the styles "greens" are most comfortable where accuracy and numbers are important. Perfectionism is inherent of their in their style. "If a job is worth doing, it's worth doing right the first time", might be their motto. They are willing to take the time to get the job done right. They are the best of the four styles at critical thinking and planning. They make the best administrators as they like order, structure, following guidelines, and plans. (Especially if they initiate them). Other styles complain that the "greens" are too rigid, too slow to make decisions, too picky, but value their planning and problem solving skills.
Red Red is the color of blood and valentines, and tend to connote and enthusiasm, which sounds a lot like the "reds". Reds are happiest when they are influencing and entertaining other people. Like the "blues" they are comfortable taking risks and trying new things. They get bored if they have to do the same old thing all the time. They are charming, playful, spontaneous, talkative types who are energized by being the center of attention. They are motivated by recognition-they want to be liked! Other styles see them as unfocused procrastinators who make up the rules as they go along, but appreciate their talents as great promoters who can sell anything.	Yellow Yellow is the color of the sun and "yellows" are like a ray of sunshine When they enter a room with their warm and caring style. Family is their number one priority. They tend to be most concerned with the needs of others. They are the best team builders, always listening to, encouraging, and bringing out the best in others. They are motivated by the appreciation of work done and have a strong need to please others. Like the "greens" , they dislike confrontation and will give into others to avoid conflict. Other styles see "yellows" as too soft. Not hard nosed enough, indecisive (they can see all sides of an issue) and resistant to change. They are often the glue that holds the group together
